

Encouraging Diversity

We are all different. Said statement is more fact than opinion. Throughout the world, there are different people with cultures and traditions that are unique. Food, clothing, legends, and religion are the most notable things that define one's culture. America is filled with different people of different backgrounds, and can express their culture freely. Everyone in America is different and that 's what makes us the same..... That we're all different!

Some cultures throughout the world make living life interesting and enjoyable. Throughout the week I'll usually ask my mom to order some take out to eat because we wouldn't feel like cooking. At the house, I kick back and listen to Drake, one of my favorite artist, and let the melody take over me. One of my best friends, Jamie, keeps me laughing at school, and I can't go throughout the day without laughing at one of his many jokes. Everything and one I've listed also come from different backgrounds then my own. During the week, my mom orders Chinese food because I love and appreciate the taste that I can't go a week without. Drake, one of the world's most popular music producers, is Canadian. My friend Jaime? His full name is Jaime Ortiz and he is Mexican. Different cultures affect my life, and I respect where a person comes from and how they express their own culture daily.

Diversity keeps the world interesting. New ideas and styles from one culture can be shared and mixed in with other cultures. I honestly hate the idea of everyone being in the same race. Adolf Hitler wanted everyone have blonde hair and blue eyes( and let's remember that Hitler himself had dark hair and brown eyes!), but you see what happened to him and his 'grandmaster plan'.

Diversity is what makes the human race special. Everyday I talk to my friends that come from different nationalities, and the things they do after school are interesting to me. Learning about different cultures during History class and understanding how people live, both nationally and internationally, I can see how different cultures can live in one country and provide for each other. A peaceful diversity are humans at their best, and encouraging diversity will only help for the benefits of everyone.
